Woman of the Year

(Continued from Page C-1) socialization meeting. But I really enjoy the presidency because I have such a wonderful group to work with and our principal is exceptionally cooperative."

What about her going to college . . . what prompted this?

"I'm thinking ahead to the time when the children are in high school or away at college. I don't want to sit around and twiddle my thumbs, and there certainly won't be enough to do then. Now I'm taking only a few units a semester, but then I'll really finish and go into teaching. The children are encouraging me in this too. They seem very proud of my school work, and get a big kick out of going to the library with me for research on my projects."

No matter how full her schedule, Ruth manages to be at home when the children return from school. In fact, the television set seems to have become the only victim of neglect in the Maxey household. Mother's academic career and father's love of reading have inspired the children, all of whom are good students, to do more reading themselves. Although they all enjoy TV, the set often stays silent for a week at a time while good books are being devoured.

Love of people seems to be the keystone of the Maxey family. Leon, a skilled meat cutter and butcher, prefers to work in a smaller neighborhood shop rather than a huge market, because he enjoys meeting people and serving them on a personal level. Their home is the center of activity for all the neighborhood children, and when one of the Maxey young is grounded as punishment, and confined to the house or room, there is a pall over the entire area.

Hobbies are plentiful in the Maxey household. A quick rundown shows that Ruth sews (all her own and the children's clothes, including Richard's shirts. He feels the ones his mother makes and for which he selects the material are more his own than store-bought ones.) Janice is interested in everything, but is concentrating on her parakeet at the moment. Richard collects stamps, white mice, makes model cars and planes, likes to build and especially to draw. Judy also draws well, collects souvenirs of places visited by the family, and has a pet guinea pig. And father builds (they've just added a patio with help from Ruth's father), gardens, and reads.

During our hour together, Ruth received a number of phone calls, all of which she answered with as warm a smile as if she were facing the person she was talking to. Yet not a moment was wasted, not an unnecessary word said. As we were leaving, a breathless PTA chairman, on her way to a committee meeting, dropped off little Barbara, aged about two, to be "baby sat" by Ruth.

Unusual? Not at all. "We all help each other this way. Of course, our children are at the stage where they're really too big to have anyone baby sit with them . . . but we feel especially lucky when we get to take care of the tiny babies. We all love them."

Born in South Dakota, educated in Albuquerque, and now so completely at home in Torrance, Ruth Maxey has a beautiful lack of vanity. She is far more anxious to talk about her children, her husband, her sister who painted the pictures so lovingly displayed on her wall, and her parents, than about herself. She doesn't consider herself unusual . . . only lucky to be living where people are so friendly, to be too busy to think of any possible aches and pains, and to have the chance to go to school, to serve her community, and to rear her children with a love of education and a sense of devotion to others.
